The verb does not distinguish gender — only 3 rd person pronouns do. Their forms should remind you of adjectives or nouns, since the endings are the same. Dots over ä in säm should remind you that the a is lost in other forms; this is my invention, normally this a is spelled and pronounced as any other a.. Again, English is a peculiar language, it does not distinguish singular and plural ...

Semino Rossi - Rot sind die Rosen (deutsch)

Language secessionism (also known as linguistic secessionism or linguistic separatism) is an attitude supporting the separation of a language variety from the language to which it has hitherto been considered to belong, in order to make this variety considered as a distinct language. This phenomenon was first analyzed by Catalan sociolinguistics but it can be ascertained in other parts of the ...
